Woodfords' Behavioral Health Homes for Children is designed to provide support to children with developmental disabilities and/or mental health diagnoses and their families. Coordinators link children and parents to resources and services in their own communities.

Services can range from informational to intensive, defined by the amount of support and intervention a family requests. Coordinators provide a wide range of supports and resources including providing information regarding the child's diagnosis, connecting the child and their family with a wide range of resources and services, assisting with school-based services, Individualized Education Planning, and more based on the goals of the child and family.

The program also specializes in helping families navigate the special education process, IEPs, and major school transitions such as the transition into kindergarten, from elementary to middle school, middle school to high school, and high school to adulthood and adult services.
